

47 things Trump would rather talk about than Jeffrey Epstein

By GISELLE RUHIYYIH EWING, ANNA WIEDERKEHR, ABHINANDA BHATTACHARYYA and PAULA FRIEDRICH
07/31/2025 05:00 AM EDT

President Donald Trump has long been a practitioner of distraction tactics during unflattering news cycles. But with the president looking to move on from the spiraling Jeffrey Epstein crisis, his flood-the-zone approach with endless posts has taken the familiar deflection playbook to a new extreme.

Trump has posted hundreds of times in recent weeks as the disgraced financier's case has gripped headlines. The posts run the gamut, including major official actions like announcing new tariff baselines, celebrating legislation like the GENIUS Act and marking foreign leaders' visits. And many have been, by Trump standards, fairly typical: contemplating trying to force the renaming of the Washington Commanders, promoting friends' books and television shows and teasing a Coca Cola drink made with U.S. cane sugar.

But many posts have also leaned into Trump's willingness in his second term to use the power of government to threaten his perceived enemies. Since the administration's handling of the Epstein investigation devolved into a full-blown scandal, Trump has argued one of his predecessors is responsible for "the crime of the century" with his "Russia, Russia, Russia hoax" theory, repeatedly floated firing the chair of the Federal Reserve and suggested revoking the citizenship of a long-time critic — something he has no apparent legal authority to do.

Amid it all, only a handful of Epstein-related posts have peppered the onslaught of unrelated content — generally to either chastise supporters or defend his reputation. However, the number of Epstein messages pale in comparison to the volley of other posts on unrelated subjects.

POLITICO compiled a list of topics dominating Trump's social media feed in the weeks since the Epstein saga blew up. In a statement, White House spokesperson Taylor Rogers said Trump "has achieved historic wins for everyday Americans, even while the media endlessly peddles fake narratives."

"President Trump's Truth social posts are a reflection of his commitment to transparency with the American people at all times," Rogers said.

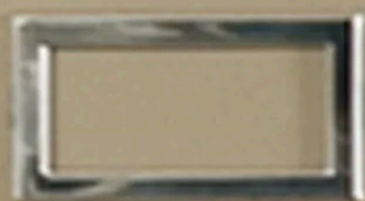

Defending Bondi

Trump penned a lengthy post standing by Attorney General Pam Bondi as she came under fire. The Department of Justice days earlier released a report quashing conspiracy theories around the existence of an Epstein “client list,” and said the agency had no further evidence to release in the case. “What’s going on with my ‘boys’ and, in some cases, ‘gals?’ They’re all going after Attorney General Pam Bondi, who is doing a FANTASTIC JOB!” Trump wrote.

JULY 12

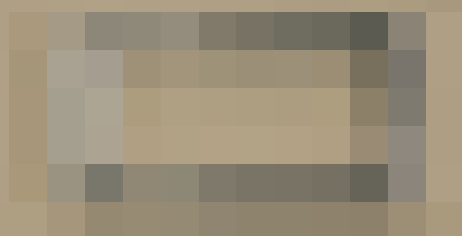

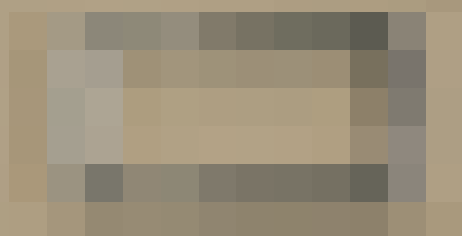

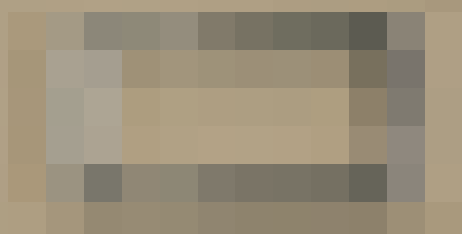

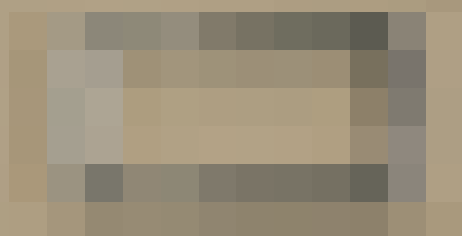

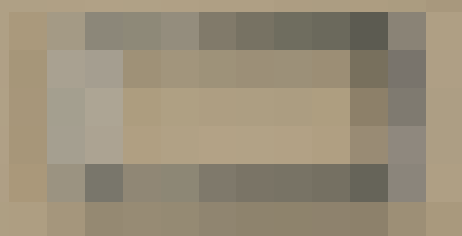

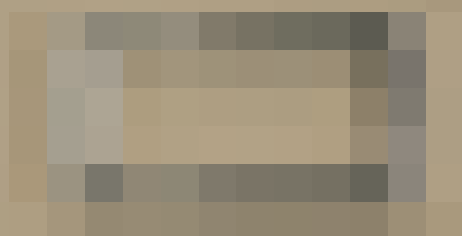

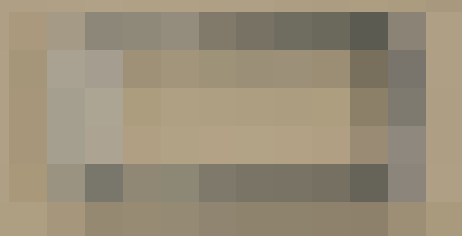

Disowning “PAST supporters”

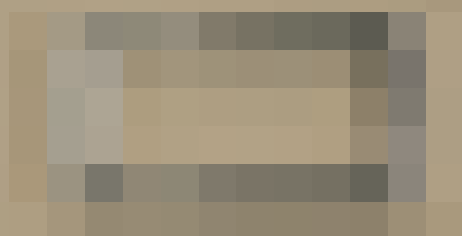

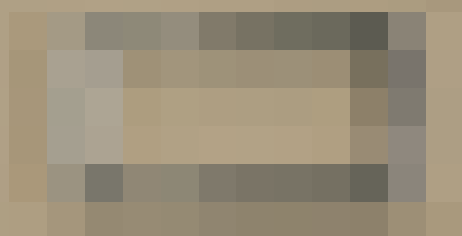

Trump lashed out at his “PAST supporters,” who he said “bought into” the Epstein “‘bullshit,’ hook, line, and sinker.” The president pinned blame for the “Jeffrey Epstein Hoax” on Democrats, attempting to tie it to the investigation into Russian collusion during his first term, which he has also repeatedly called a hoax.

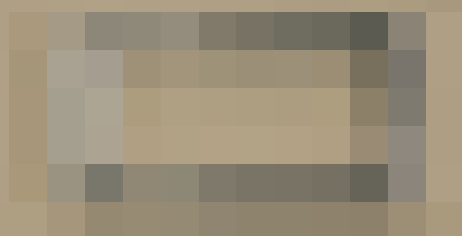

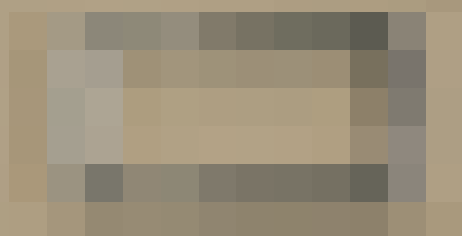

JULY 16

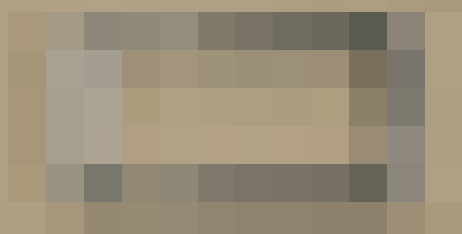

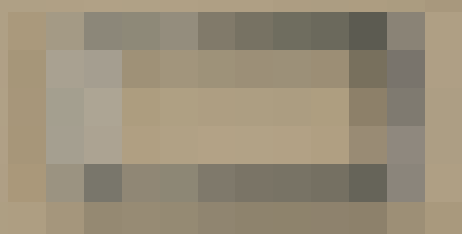

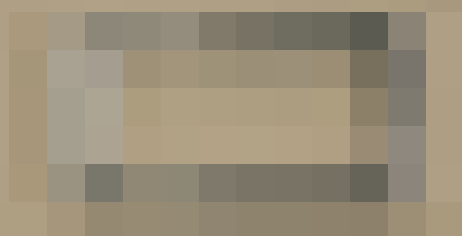

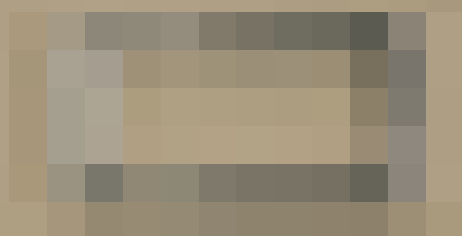

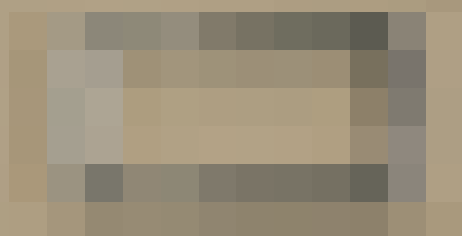

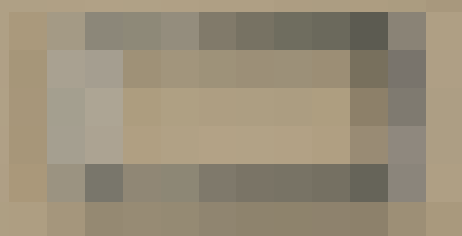

Suing Rupert Murdoch's "ass off"

Trump once again attacked the WSJ, threatening to sue the “ass off” newspaper owner Rupert Murdoch.

JULY 17

Release the files

On the heels of the WSJ story, Trump announced that he was ordering Bondi to begin the process of releasing “pertinent” grand jury testimony in Epstein’s criminal case. Trump cited “the ridiculous amount of publicity given to Jeffrey Epstein” as the basis for his move.

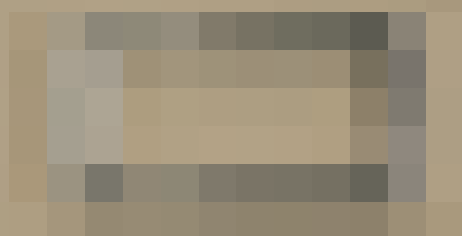

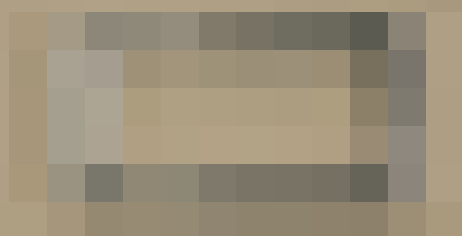

JULY 17

“FAKE” letter

After The Wall Street Journal published the alleged birthday letter, Trump lashed out at the publication and its owners, saying the letter was “a FAKE” and vowing to sue the paper.

JULY 17

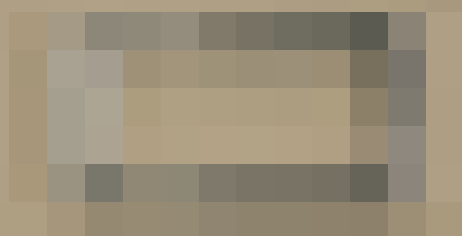

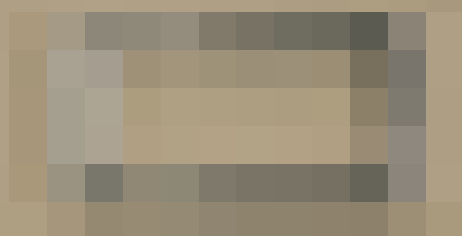

No “smoking gun”

Trump once again attempted to point the finger at Democrats over the Epstein case, saying that if there was a “smoking gun,” the previous administration would have used it.

JULY 18

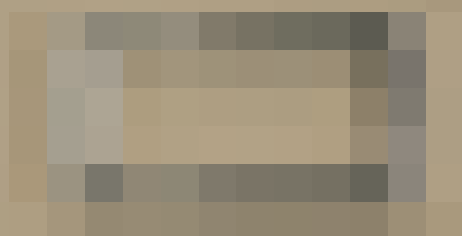

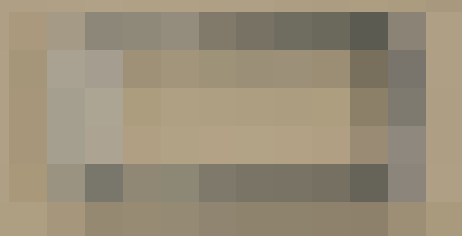

Teasing Murdoch testimony

After filing suit against The Wall Street Journal over its publication of the alleged Epstein birthday letter, Trump teased the opportunity to hear testimony from the paper's owner, Rupert Murdoch. "That will be an interesting experience!!!" Trump wrote.

JULY 18

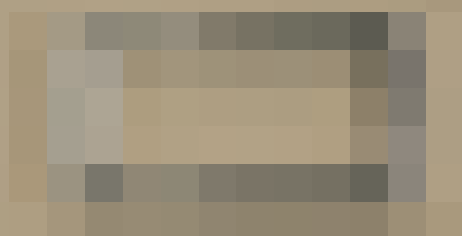

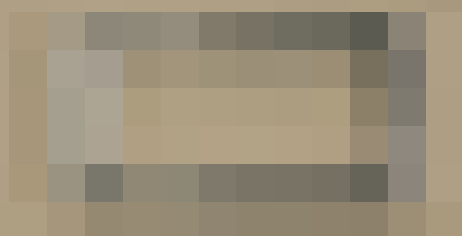

“POWERHOUSE Lawsuit”

Trump announced that his legal team had filed a “POWERHOUSE Lawsuit” against The Wall Street Journal over its publication of a salacious letter allegedly written by Trump for Epstein’s birthday. The report, Trump wrote, was “false, malicious, defamatory.” POLITICO has not independently verified the letter exists.

JULY 18

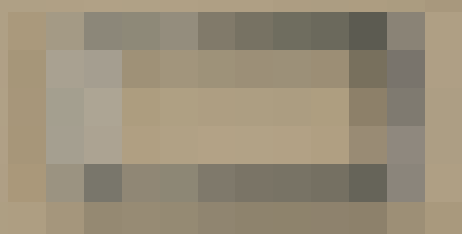

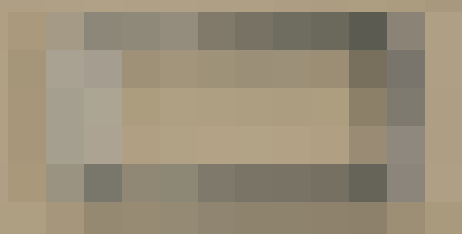

Never satisfied

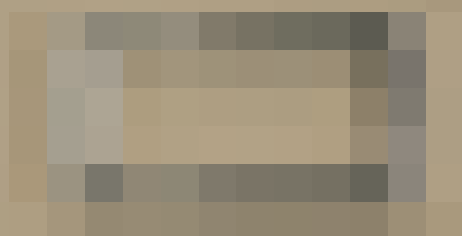

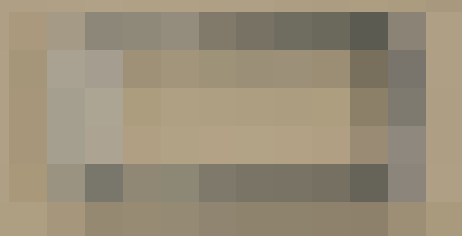

Just days after ordering the Department of Justice to release all “pertinent” grand jury testimony in the Epstein case, Trump said that the move would still likely not satisfy everyone clamoring for more information. “Nothing will be good enough for the troublemakers and radical left lunatics making the request,” Trump warned.

JULY 19

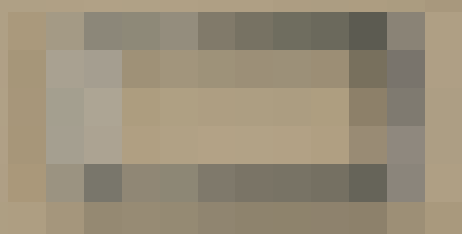

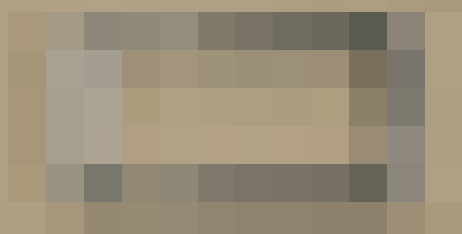

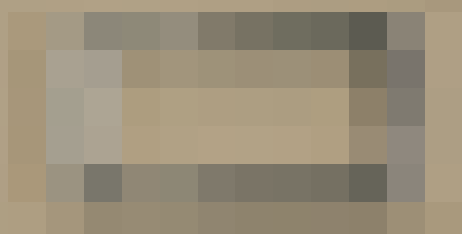

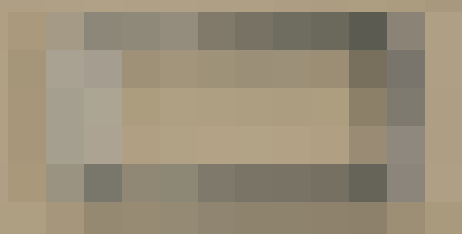

Polling positives

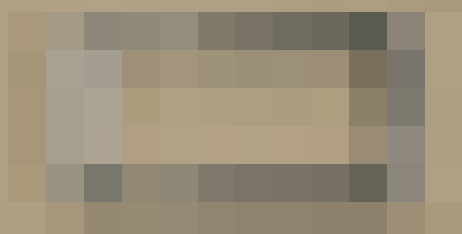

Trump claimed that his polling within the Republican Party was on the upswing, even amid the “Jeffrey Epstein Hoax.” But a series of polls released just days prior showed a split emerging among Republicans over the administration’s handling of the issue, amid overall voter dissatisfaction over the issue.

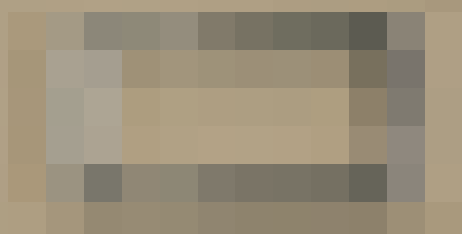

JULY 20

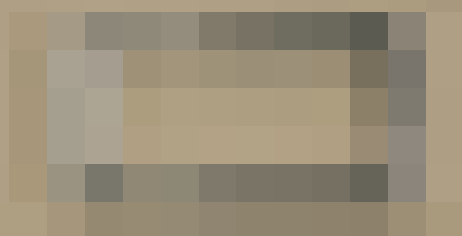

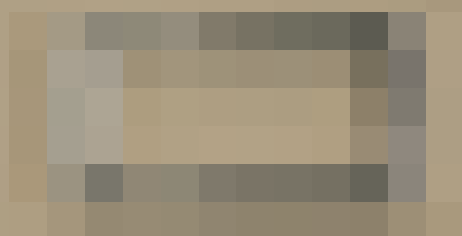

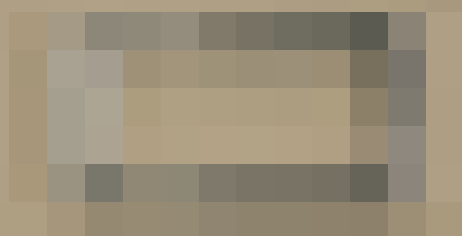

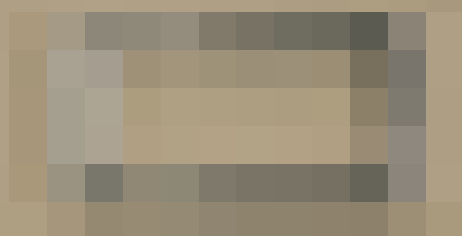

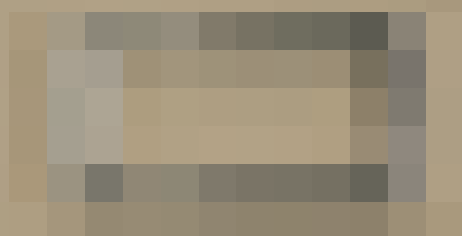

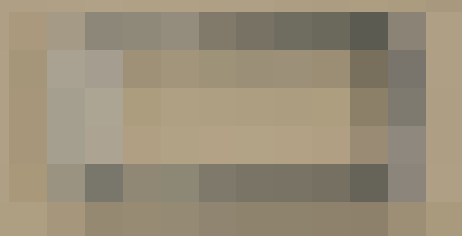

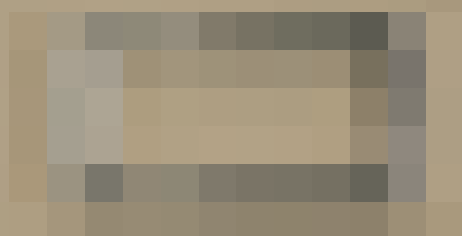

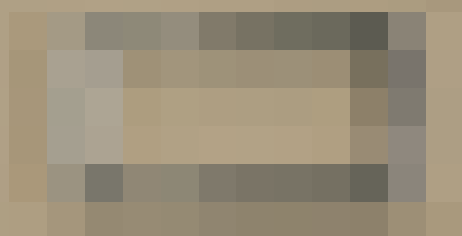

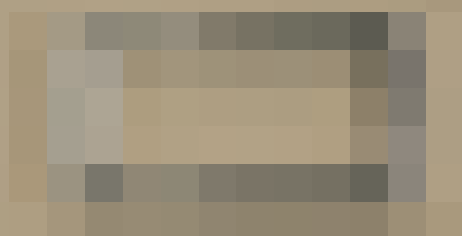

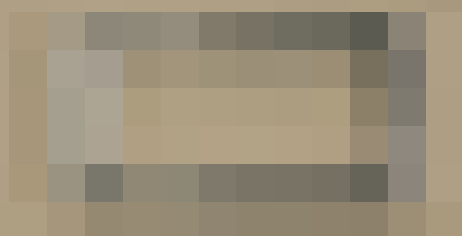

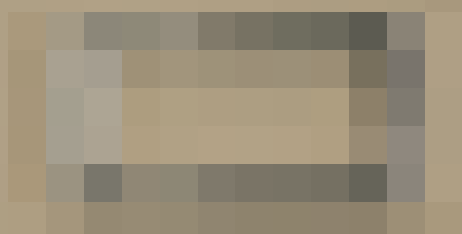

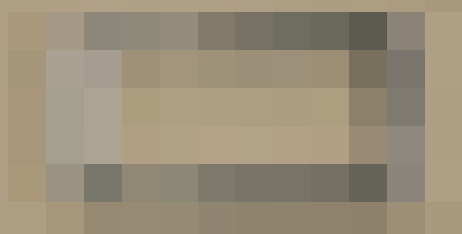

Slamming the media

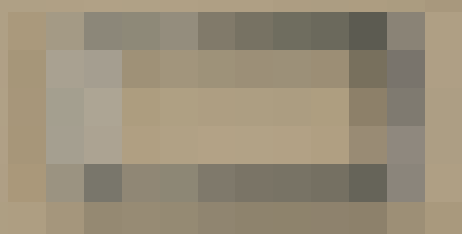

Trump lamented that the volume of news about the Epstein case was distracting from his administration’s accomplishments during its first six months. “All the Fake News wants to talk about is the Jeffrey Epstein Hoax,” he wrote.

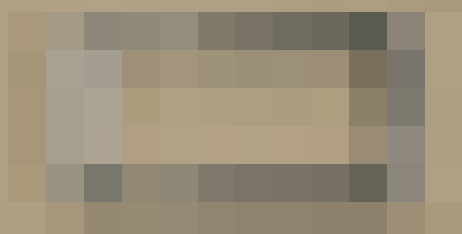

JULY 22

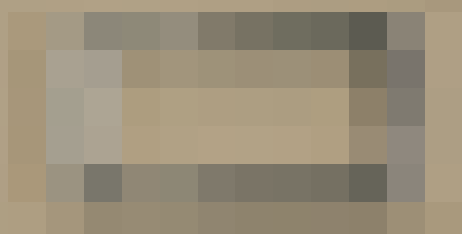

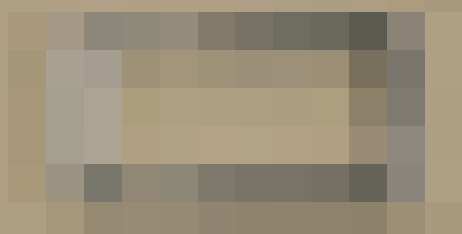

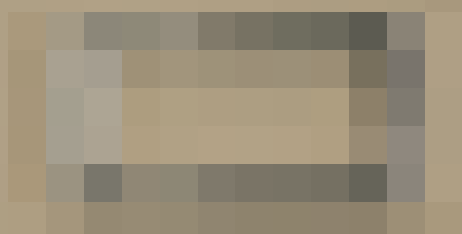

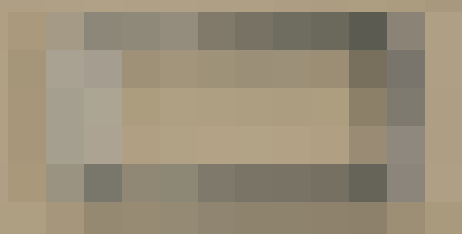

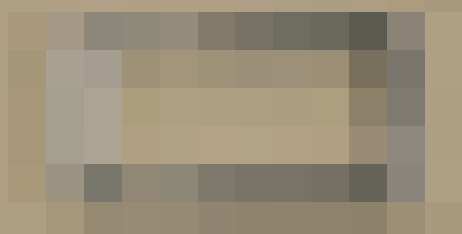

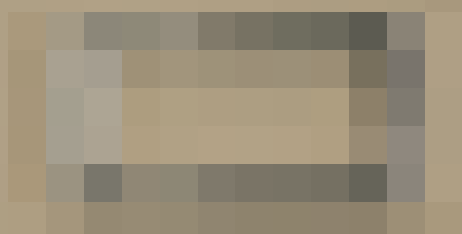

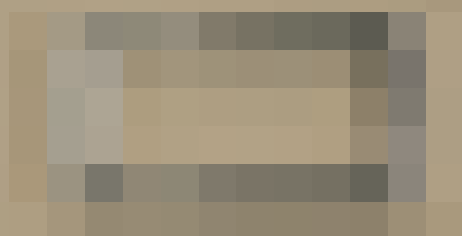

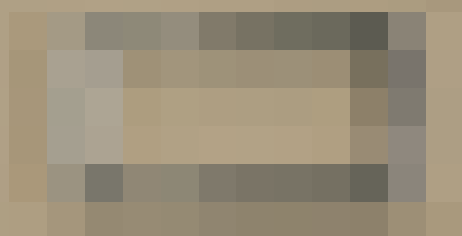

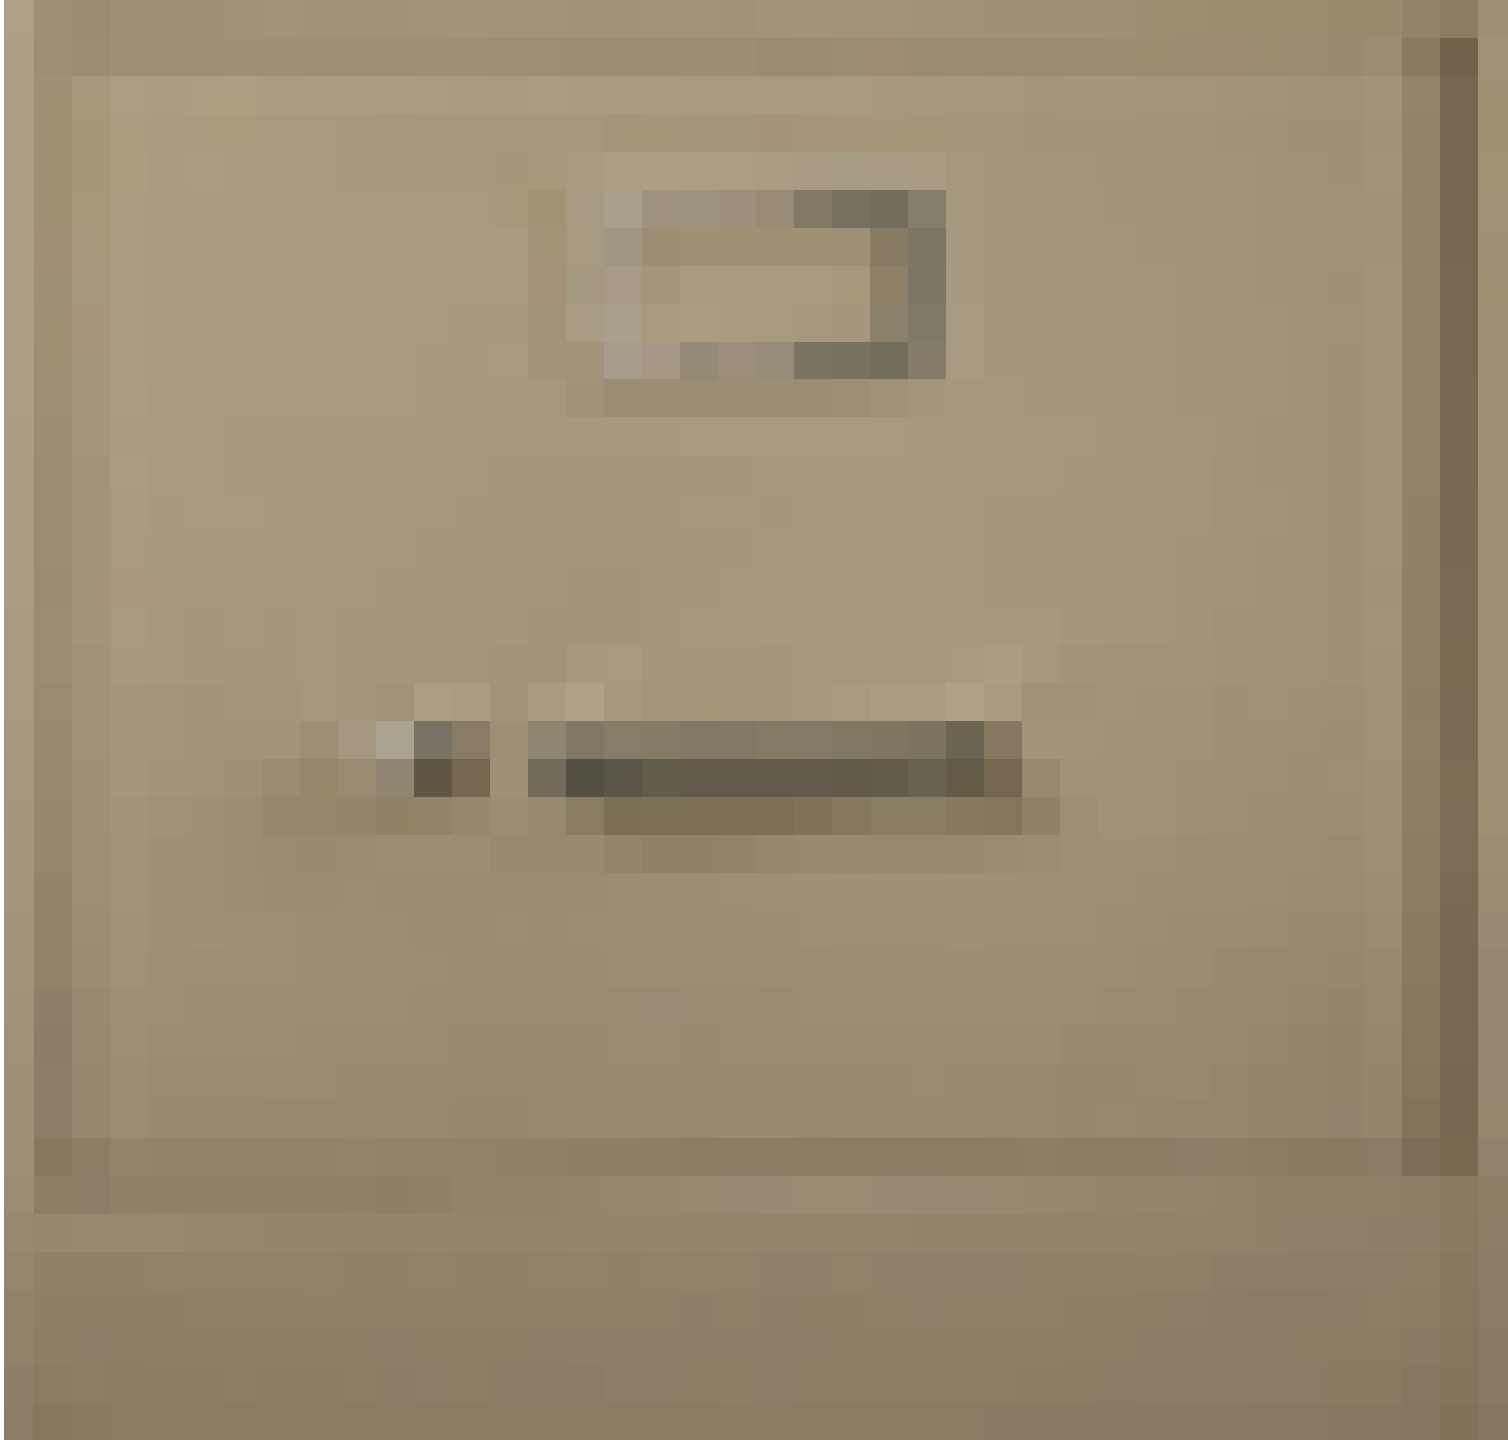

CREDITS

Reporting and writing: Giselle Ruhiyyih Ewing
Editing: Zach Montellaro, David Kihara and Jonathan Lai
Design and Development: Anna Wiederkehr, Abhinanda Bhattacharyya and Paula Friedrich
Photos: AP, Getty, iStock

LEGAL

Terms of Service Privacy Policy

© 2025 POLITICO LLC