Bipartisan support is building for appointing a special prosecutor to oversee the release of the Epstein files. Republican Rep. Nancy Mace said she has consistently backed a special prosecutor and full disclosure, adding, "I think the biggest question is why didn't more people go to jail?"

Rep. Tim Burchett expressed frustration with Attorney General Pam Bondi, saying, "I think it's time to just have a prosecutor that will prosecute some people in this town."

Rep. Becca Balint echoed the call for an Epstein special prosecutor saying, "100 percent. Yeah."

Democrats have also pressed for stronger action. Rep. Mark Pocan said the files should be released immediately and enforcement is needed beyond the Department of Justice, which he criticized for failing to act. Rep. Steve Cohen added, "It may be time."

Rep. Jasmine Crockett said the American people across party lines want accountability, noting that leaders in power have been derelict in their duties. The comments signal growing frustration around the fact that Pam Bondi has arrested no Epstein clients despite the absolutely horrific crimes committed against children in the Epstein files.
