Around 10 'New' Victims in France's Epstein Probe: Prosecutor

- Top Paris prosecutor Laure Beccau reported on Sunday that around 10 new suspected victims have come forward in the French investigation into the network of late sex offender Jeffrey Epstein.
- France launched a human trafficking investigation after the Justice Department released the latest cache of Epstein files in January, which detailed charges of trafficking underage girls for sex against the financier.
- Investigators are searching through 3.5 million pages of the so-called Epstein files while reviewing the financier's computer, telephone records, and address books to identify names mentioned by alleged victims.
- Beccau noted investigators are arranging meetings for victims currently abroad, though she added that "None of the people who could potentially be implicated have been questioned" so far.
- Around 20 suspected victims have now made themselves known following Beccau's public appeal for potential victims to speak up, bringing the total count since the investigation began.
