

Survivors Urge Congress to Release Epstein Files in Powerful Open Letter

Survivors demand Congress end decades of secrecy and deliver long-overdue accountability.

Aaron Parnas • 11 hours ago

Twenty-four survivors of Jeffrey Epstein and Ghislaine Maxwell’s crimes—joined by members of Virginia Roberts Giuffre’s family—have issued an emotional and urgent appeal to the United States Senate and House of Representatives, demanding that Congress vote to release the long-awaited Epstein files.

In a letter delivered to lawmakers today, the signatories call on Congress to “deliver a promise the American people have awaited for far too long” by voting YES on the Epstein Files Transparency Act. The survivors argue that releasing the files is critical to achieving true accountability for the vast network of individuals who enabled Epstein and Maxwell’s abuse.

The letter opens with a reminder of the testimony several survivors recently gave on Capitol Hill—accounts that visibly shook many members of Congress.

“We urge you, when you cast your vote, please do not forget the horror you felt that day,” the survivors write. “There is no middle ground here. There is no hiding behind party affiliation.”

The authors stress that those testimonies represent only a fraction of the trauma endured by Epstein and Maxwell’s victims—numbering more than a thousand, according to the letter.

The survivors argue that the public release of the files is essential to confronting what they describe as a longstanding “double standard of justice,” in which powerful individuals connected to Epstein have escaped meaningful consequences.

The letter emphasizes that despite years of investigation, most of the pair’s alleged co-conspirators “remain completely free, continuing to amass power and prestige.” The survivors urge lawmakers to consider their own loved ones as they cast their votes:

“Look into the eyes of your children, your sisters, your mothers, and your aunts. Imagine if they had been preyed upon. Imagine if you yourself were a survivor.”

They also make clear that their communities are watching, warning legislators that their decisions “will be remembered at the ballot box.”

One of the most poignant sections of the letter centers on Virginia Roberts Giuffre, the survivor whose courage made her one of the most prominent voices in exposing Epstein’s trafficking network. Giuffre, who passed away in April, is remembered in the letter as “a true American hero” and “a beacon of strength to survivors everywhere.”

Her family and fellow survivors say her bravery—despite threats, public attacks, and immense personal hardship—helped transform the case and emboldened others to step forward.

“Virginia was failed over and over by the systems that consistently believed and supported her abusers over her,” the letter states. “Today, we urge you not to fail another survivor.”

In urging Congress to release the files, they ask lawmakers to “embody Virginia’s courage” and take a stand in her absence.

The letter concludes with a direct appeal for Congress to pass the Epstein Files Transparency Act, describing the vote as a test of justice, accountability, and national integrity.

“Vote YES on the Epstein Files Transparency Act. Vote for justice, accountability, and the truth.”

The signatories close the letter with “gratitude, respect, and resilience,” representing not only themselves but the broader community of survivors and loved ones carrying on this fight.

Full letter below:

Dear Esteemed Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives,

We write to you as the family of Virginia Roberts Giuffre, and as fellow survivors of Jeffrey Epstein, Ghislaine Maxwell, and their co-conspirators. You have the ability to vote to release the Epstein files, and with it, deliver a promise the American people have awaited for far too long. We implore you to do so.

Several weeks ago, when a few brave survivors stood before you and recounted their harrowing stories, many of you were shaken to your core. We urge you, when you cast your vote, please do not forget the horror you felt that day.

There is no middle ground here. There is no hiding behind party affiliation. The testimonies you heard are just a fraction of the unimaginable suffering endured by more than a thousand victims alike.

Epstein and Maxwell's crimes exposed a double standard of justice, where rich and powerful men and women evade repercussions. Despite years of work to bring them to justice, most of Epstein and Maxwell's co-conspirators remain completely free, continuing to amass power and prestige, living without apparent shame.

As you gather with your family this season, remember that your primary duty is to your constituents. Look into the eyes of your children, your sisters, your mothers, and your aunts. Imagine if they had been preyed upon. Imagine if you yourself were a survivor. What would you want for them? What would you want for yourself? When you vote, we will remember your decision at the ballot box.

This last April, we lost our sister Virginia, a true American hero and a beacon of strength to survivors everywhere. Her resilience in the face of immense adversity—the threats to her life, financial ruin, and public shaming—inspired us all. Her courage brought this case to a monumental turning point, and her testimony exposed the lurid secrets of a global sex trafficking network. In doing so, she brought down a prince, and paved the way for us to come forward and fight. Virginia was failed over and over by the systems that consistently believed and supported her abusers over her. Today, we urge you not to fail another survivor and deny them justice any longer.

Embody Virginia's courage. Be brave and stand for her, in her absence. Vote YES on the Epstein Files Transparency Act. Vote for justice, accountability, and the truth.

With gratitude, respect, and resilience, from survivors and the family and friends who love them.